Return to Part 1 Requirements

Statement

Cross-concern relationships involving policy-governed release SHALL preserve the distinction between governance, authority, Traceability, Evidence, Data, and Interpretation.

Source

Part 1, Section 13.6: Separation of Concerns Requirements.

Rationale

Policy-governed release involves governance, authority, traceability, evidence, data, and interpretation. These concerns interact when information is evaluated, authorized, transformed, released, withheld, audited, or reconstructed. Each concern retains a distinct architectural purpose.

This requirement prevents release governance from collapsing authority, data, interpretation, traceability, and evidence into a single release decision or implementation mechanism.

Applies To

This requirement applies to cross-concern relationships involving policy-governed release within the Conceptual Architecture.

It applies specifically to:

- Governance
- Authority
- Traceability
- Evidence
- Data
- Interpretation
- Policy-governed release

Verification

Verification SHALL confirm that cross-concern relationships involving policy-governed release preserve the distinction between governance, authority, Traceability, Evidence, Data, and Interpretation.

Verification activities include review checks confirming that:

- Policy-governed release identifies the governance concern involved
- Policy-governed release identifies the authority concern involved
- Policy-governed release preserves Traceability and Evidence as distinct concerns
- Policy-governed release preserves Data and Interpretation as distinct concerns
- Release mechanisms do not redefine the concerns involved
